Description of the Related Art Motor vehicles, in particular commercial vehicles, are known to comprise a drive train, with an internal combustion engine that drives a generator to provide power for an electric drive motor that drives the vehicle. The internal combustion engine, such as a diesel engine, has a generator coupled thereto via the drive shaft, also known as a drive line. The generator comprises a main shaft and a stator that is disposed on the main shaft. An intermediate shaft is rotatably connected to the main shaft and a rotor, which is disposed on the intermediate shaft, is connected to the drive motor via a coupling device, for example a transmission. At least one driven axle of the vehicle has a wheel in each case pivotally connected to a wheel carrier and having a wheel hub disposed on a wheel center on the wheel carrier. The wheel carrier is connected to the vehicle via a rigid connection, for example a non-slip connection or a hub connection. During the coupling process of the f678ea999e
